Single mom's ankle injuries from head-on collision settled for $365,000

A single mother was driving a minivan for her company, where she was a part-time employee, when she was struck head-on by another vehicle. The woman suffered a serious ankle fracture that required three surgeries including an ankle fusion. The other driver claimed that he was forced to swerve into the oncoming lane to avoid a car coming off an entrance ramp. The victim was represented by Liever, Hyman and Potter. The firm's exhaustive investigation revealed that the other driver's car had bald tires, and also found witnesses who contradicted the other driver's story. The firm was able to obtain all available coverage from four different insurance companies, in a settlement that totaled $365,000.
