Lawyers Win Insurance Battle for Chemical Spill Victim

Following a chemical spill, a worker began to suffer from headache pain, dizziness and fatigue. The symptoms eventually became so severe that the man was unable to work, yet the insurance company denied his claim for benefits, arguing that the victim's diagnosis of multiple chemical sensitivity was not universally accepted by the medical community. However the victim's attorneys, the Reading, Pennsylvania law firm of Liever, Hyman & Potter, were able to obtain a qualified expert not only to treat the client, but also to provide testimony that helped win the case. Despite subsequent efforts by the insurance company to terminate his compensation, the injured worker continues to receive benefits to this day.
