Nuke worker's back injury settled for $160,000 despite disputed claim

A worker at a nuclear power plant suffered a herniated disc while lifting. The employer disputed the claim, contending that the disc was merely bulging, and not herniated. The injured worker's case was successfully handled by the Berks County, Pennsylvania law firm of Liever, Hyman and Potter, who won a workers' compensation settlement of $160,000.
