Vocational Expert Provides Winning Testimony for Injured Worker

Following a period of receiving total disability benefits as the result of head and neck injuries, a worker who was struck with a plastic tube learned that the insurance company was attempting to modify or suspend his compensation based on a labor market survey. However, attorneys from the Reading, Pennsylvania law firm of Liever, Hyman and Potter, found that the vocational consultant hired by the insurance company failed to test their client. The attorneys hired their own vocational expert to perform cognitive testing of the claimant, which disclosed that he had weaknesses in his ability to process information. As a result, the judge ruled in favor of the injured worker.
